Christmas Valley To Share In 1967 Forecast Of Booming Oregon

U-FINISH MODEL WELL underway. The Penn Phillips Company story and a half home, announced last month, is more than an architect's sketch. This photograph of the rising model, with some of the Christmas Eve snowfall still remaining on the ground, discloses that the building will soon be ready for inspection.

1967. Well, I've seen a lot of them come and go. Some I could hardly wait to get out of and some I couldn't stand to see pass because they'd been so good. But by and large, standing here and looking back, even those years that I more or less stumbled through don't look too bad in the full picture. It's like a ladder, with some rungs farther apart than others: put together, all those rungs, regardless of their spacing, help to reach the top.

Not that this, 1967, is going to be the top. Hopefully, we're a long way from there, because actually getting somewhere has nowhere near the flavor of the trying to get there. It's the "striving" that lends the zest to living, and when you've quit looking for zest you've quit living.

Politically, I think our state's in pretty good shape. We're sending to Washington as our new senator a very capable man. As only the second two-term governor in the state's history, Mark O. Hatfield leaves a fine record of accomplishment in Oregon. He encour-

1967 Model of Christmas Valley To Show Improvements on '66 Progress

Just as the automobile industry comes up each season with variations and improvements on its product, so will 1967 see refinements and improvements in the development of Christmas Valley, according to Carlo P. Giuntini, President of M. Penn Phillips Company.

"We fully intend to make the coming year the best yet in our valley," Mr. Giuntini said. "The good things that have developed here as the years pass we will make every effort to improve upon. The Family Vacation Plans, for instance — they are so well received as the best of vacation-dollar buys that we couldn't do less than continue them and make them even better."

Events Scheduled

The highly popular events of summer — the golf tournament, the rodeo and the sports car races — will all be held as in the past. Experience in producing the events in other years will enable the committees to improve on the next contests.

Nature Helps

"One thing we're sure of," Mr. Giuntini continued, "the events that Nature takes a hand in, like golf and fishing, are bound to improve. Given a little raking, mowing and watering, every year makes a great improvement in a golf course. The sod gets thicker and the trees bushier and while the average player's score may go up because the hazards grow, his pleasure in playing a beautiful course more than makes up for the difficulties."

"Just so the fishing. The kam-loops trout found Christmas Valley Lake very much to their liking. They're spawning well and growing like weeds. Rainbow trout, introduced for the first time last year, have likewise

Recreation District To Elect Member

John A. Pettus, President of the Christmas Valley Park and Recreation District, announces that there will be an election of one member of the Board of Directors, to serve for a three year term. The voting is scheduled to take place at the Lodge on January 17, 1967 — any time between the hours of 2 and 8 p.m.

Open

The position, to fill the vacancy left by Betty Goeres, whose term expires, is open to all who are lawfully qualified, including the retiring member.

Members of the Board who are still serving unexpired terms are John Pettus, Al Baert, Bob Byam and Mel Brown.

Christmas Valley residents whose names have been suggested for the position are Wesley Ladbury, Betty Goeres, Jerry Emery and Floyd Olander.

Past Year Set Economic Record For Farming, Business and Industry

In spite of a nationwide check in the headlong housing boom of the past few years, Oregon, whose forests supply much of the home-building material the country uses, showed a personal income of some $5.885 billion, a full 10 per cent ahead of the previous 1965 record.

Lumber Hit, Gains

Even the lumber industry, fighting a tight money and other marketing problems, managed to eke out a fractional gain to add to the fine overall score.

Easing of money credits and a noticeable decrease in the amount of available housing, promises a brighter picture in 1967 for the wood products industry. Plywood crating and containers for shipping to Vietnam, for instance, show a steady monthly increase as that action continues, and even grows.

Farm Products

Helping to make the Oregon economy as healthy as it was last year was the increased production and use of the state's farm products. The haphazard methods of pioneer days have long been gone from the farming scene, and each year see new concepts, better fertilizers, better irrigation and better seeds than the year before. These technical improvements, along with speedier and more efficient marketing, promise the farmer, whatever his specialized product, a larger share of the country's economy.

According to Leonard W. Orvold, U.S. agricultural statistician, the Oregon cash farm income last year was approximately $505 million, up $5.6 million from the previous year.

Tourism Grows

Tourism, that subtle economic shadow that adds much to an area's well being, showed a good increase for the whole state of Oregon. "Foreigners" are estimated to have spent some $257.7 million, increasing last year's gain 1.5 percent over the previous high year.

Locally, in Christmas Valley, we can see the effect tourists aged the building of over 700 new industrial plants that created over 180,000 new jobs. He headed trade commissions all over the country and the world, selling Oregon products. True, his biennial state budget jumped from $307 million to $609 million in his eight years tenure, but the fact is that taxes remained the same: the increased economy brought in more income tax money at the old rates.

Personally, I'm glad to have as my representative in Washington a man who thought of the future when he was the head of the state. A statement he made then stays with me: "The seeds we sow, our children will reap. Let us prepare for them a good harvest so that Oregon may have a bountiful second century." I hope he takes the same concept, multiplied fifty times, into the halls of Congress.

Senator Hatfield comes from a state whose motto is powerfully expressive: THE UNION. Not a lot of fancy latin — just a homespun, spit-on-the-hands and roll-up-the-sleeves kind of motto. Just as when the English raise their glasses and say: "The Queen" they aren't talking about a pretty woman in Buckingham Palace — they're talking about England and all it has meant to the world in the past. So, too, when we Oregonians say THE UNION, we mean we're dedicated not only to our own state and the United States, but to all the men and women who go to make up this wonderful brotherhood we call America.

We've got flaws, sure, but we've got a lot of plus values. For one thing this nation has the biggest heart this old world has ever seen: no country ever tried to help others so much, or gave away so much of its treasure, good will and brave young men. We're sneered at from ocean to ocean, but there's hardly one of those sneerers who wouldn't jump at the chance to become a citizen.

All the past years, good and bad, have led us to this position. There's no reason to think that 1967 won't also take us one rung further up the ladder of destiny. I'm glad to be here to watch it unfold, just as I'm awfully glad to be a part of the unfolding. The whole picture is made up of a lot of little pieces, just as Christmas Valley is a part of Oregon, and Oregon a part of the Nation. What we do here, in our little valley, may well have a tremendous effect on the state, and therefore on the country. Let's try to make 1967 in Christmas Valley, the brightest and best year. As Tiny Tim said: "God bless us, every one."

San Jose Booster Club Cuts Christmas Valley Melon at Annual Party

In early December the San Jose Christmas Valley Property Owners Association held its annual meeting at which substantial prizes were awarded to all those who had worked diligently promoting the spirit of Christmas Valley.

The two main prizes of industrial lots were won by Mrs. Ida S. Kersey of Daly City and Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Western of Watsonville, California. Mrs. Kersey was awarded Lot 10, Unit 2, Block 3 of the Townsite and the Westerns got Lot 36, Unit 2, Block 3. Mrs. Kersey and her two sons already own 160 and the Westerns 100 acres.

Others

A handsome coffee table, the work of that master craftsman, Mr. Pugmire, was awarded to Mrs. Helen Boyd, also of Daly City, California.

Six people attending won week-ends at Christmas Valley. They are: the Albert Deans of Palo Alto, the Richard Littaus of Sunnyville, the Harold Kellys of Fremont, the Henry Jacksons of San Jose, the Wm. L. Walzaks of San Jose and the Henry Haases of San Francisco — all of the Bay area.

Turkeys

Ten turkeys were donated by Mr. Louis De Sena, President of the Association. The lucky winners were as follows: the Barons, Robellos, Christiansons, Cosettes, Henslees, Fricks, Rubys, Spatafores, Livelys and the Denisons.

The Property Owners Association is open to all in the Bay area — Christmas Valley owners are urged to join, and not only join, but attend the fun meetings that are held almost monthly throughout the year. To attend is to win: seven members who did not attend this last meeting of the year had their names called as winners, but weren't here to claim their prizes. Sadly enough, all of the losers live in San Jose!

Those interested in joining should use the coupon in this issue of the Gazette.

Oregon Completes Border to Border Interstate Highway 5

Dedication ceremonies held last month marked the completion of Interstate 5, providing a four-lane, border-to-border freeway. The Oregon highway is the longest non-toll, cross-state route completed to date under the Interstate Highway program.

City, county, state and federal officials, along with members of the nearby communities, participated in the ceremonies at which Governor Mark O. Hatfield was principal speaker.

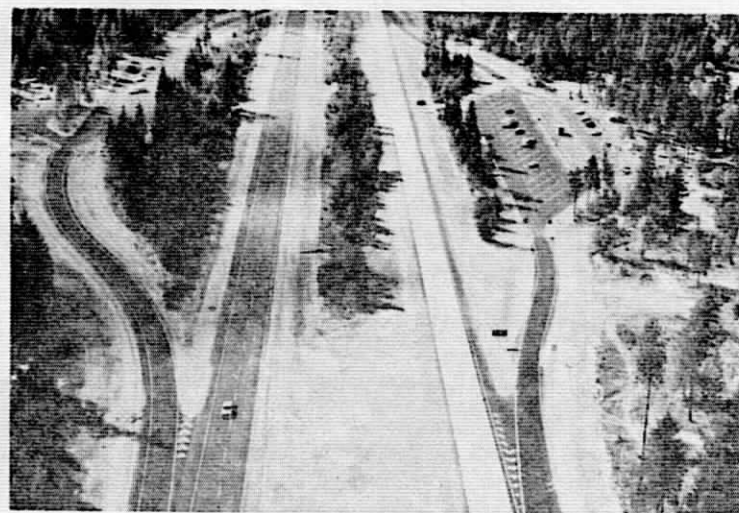

Leads

Oregon consistently has led the nation in the amount of its Interstate Highway system completed. At the end of the 1966 fiscal year, Oregon had 85.8 percent of its Interstate system open to or adequate for present traffic, while the entire national system showed a 53 percent figure.

Interstate 5 is an integral component of the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways that will, when completed, provide the nation with a network of 41,000 miles of north-south and east-west high-speed freeways, engineered to provide greatest driver safety.

COW CREEK SAFETY REST AREA was the site of the dedication ceremonies held upon completion of Interstate 5. The area is 29 miles north of Grants Pass. Participating in the dedication were a number of local, county, state and federal dignitaries. Governor Mark O. Hatfield, now Senator, was the principal speaker. taken hold and made the lake their home. Under the Recreation Association's control, fishing will be better than ever.

"And next season's duck hunting, with the private shooting ponds showing two full years of med for completion in 1972 and will cost an estimated total of more than $46 billion. Cost of construction of Interstate 5 in Oregon, which spans 308.38 miles, is about $298.6 million. This figure includes expenditures prior to the 1956 Interstate Highway Act, preliminary engineering costs and right of way. The Federal government has paid 92.25 percent and the state 7.75 percent of the total.

Rest Areas

There are 114 partial or full interchanges controlling access to the highway and 18 safety rest areas, half for northbound traffic and half for southbound, to provide points of relaxation for travelers on the freeway.

Yet to be completed is Oregon's Interstate 80N, extending from Portland along the Columbia to Boardman, then southeasterly to Ontario on the Idaho border. Some 205.6 miles of that route's 375 miles are now open to traffic.

Winter Snows Draw Ski Buffs

All over the country the white snow of winter is adding another chapter in the American's constant search for recreation. From a necessity of yesteryear, the current citizen finds himself on runners just for fun. The barrel staves of long ago have given way to sleek skis of dozens of

Roads, Facilities Improved

The roads and other public facilities, Mr. Giuntini declared, will be further up-graded. As the community grows and the pattern of development settles, more and more of those who bought just for recreation or investment, will begin to look on the area as an attractive place in which to make their full-time home.

U-Finish Homes

"To help people toward that decision," President Giuntini further developed, "we've introduced the new U-Finish Home idea. At a very reasonable rate a Christmas Valley property owner can have a 750 sq. ft. house, with real move-in qualities, put on his land — ready for him to add the finishing touches as he wishes. The house comes weather-tight and far enough along so that anyone, even a thumb-banger, ought to be able to do a very credible job in making an attractive, all-year home."

Recreation Stressed

As the recreation areas of the nation decrease with the growth in population and the sprawling extension of business and industry, recreational land is increasingly valuable. Property such as that in Christmas Valley, near upland and waterfowl shooting, game animals and splendid fishing, gets more valuable every day.

"Christmas Valley is a settled, growing community," Mr. Giuntini concluded, "full of happy, helpful people. If there's one forecast for 1967 that will be fulfilled, it's that this pleasant place is going to see a bigger and better year than ever before."

have on our own economy. Nobody goes to visit a place and just pays for food and lodging: he buys gasoline, gum, candy, refreshments — maybe another blouse or shirt. Certainly here he will need another golf ball or two and a new fish lure — little by little these small "extra" items add up into big business.

Recreation Big

One of the major businesses of the country is just selling service. In a recreational area such as Christmas Valley, the more we polish the fine reputation we now have for being a friendly, helpful community, the more attractive our valley is going to become for the outsider — let alone a happier, more pleasant place in which to live ourselves.

You just can't lose showing a visitor where to fish, how to play that tough 6th hole, where the geese fly low or where the most arrowheads are found. This is a prime outdoors playground and the more we share it, the better off we all are.

Visitors to Residents

With the nationwide increase in income and mobility, more people are travelling more. And as visitors to the state increase, so will the number of residents. Oregon is one of the few states that needs more people: with a ranking of 10th in size, its population rank is only 32nd among all the states of the union. Visitors who come to Oregon and find it a growing state, offering a fine livelihood as well as splendid recreation, may well decide to make it their home.

1966 saw many residents of other states make that decision; 1967, we feel, will find many more coming to the same conclusion.

Oregon can't help but grow in population and importance; can Christmas Valley do any less?

Road Runners Return To Christmas Valley

Emulating the Capistrano swallows more than their namesakes, the Emerald Road Runners of Eugene returned once more to enjoy the recreational facilities of Christmas Valley.

More than fifty members, including wives and children, spent the New Year's Eve weekend in town. The club members, making their third visit in just a few months took over the entire Lakeside Motel and spilled out into other quarters as well.

The organization travels equipped with all kinds of vehicles from dune buggies to campers, each modified to the owners' concept of what a fun wagon should be. That their individual ideas blend well together is evidenced by the enthusiasm of the entire group.

Using the Christmas Valley Lodge as a rallying point for both meals and conferences, the Road Runners spent the long weekend exploring the adjacent countryside.

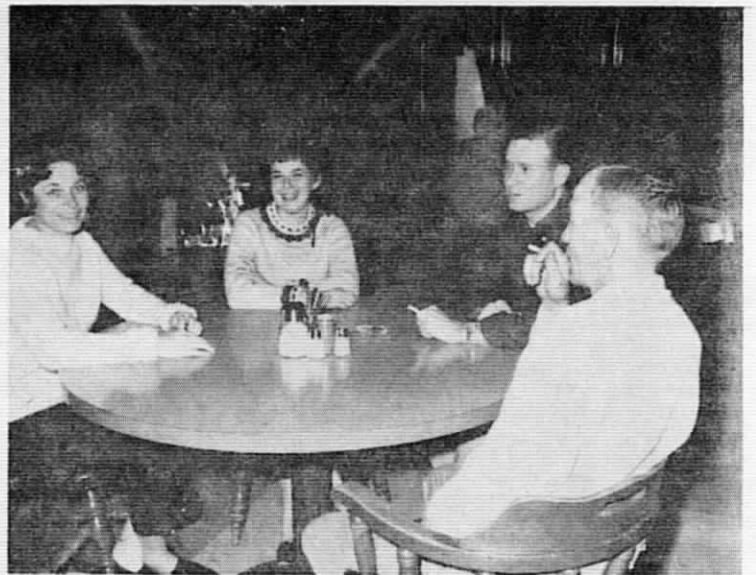

Library Shows Giving Helps

Not all the gifts that circulated through Christmas Valley during the yule season went to individuals — the local Library received a number of presents from well-wishers all over the country.

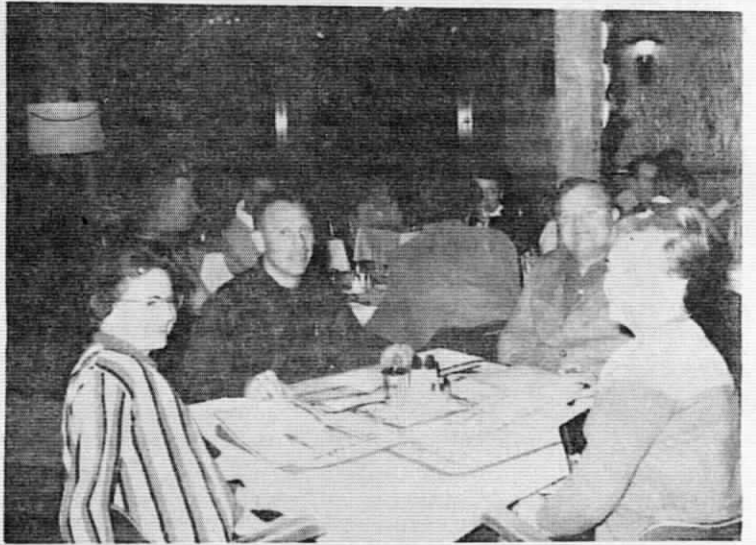

The people who use the books the most, the local residents, are extremely grateful for the generous spirit of sharing shown by those who have the interests of the valley at heart.

Never Too Much

Small as it is, our library has one thing in common with every other library: it will never have too many books!

OREGON JUNCO BRIGHTENS WINTER SCENE

During the spring and summer months Oregon juncos are well distributed throughout the state. However, with the first signs of winter these snowbirds, as they are commonly called, migrate down from the mountains and out of the north to our valleys and lowlands. Here they gather in small flocks and remain through the winter, even though severe weather may set in and snows blanket their feeding areas.

Sparrows

The Oregon junco belongs to the family of sparrows and is frequently found in close association with other members of this group. It is slightly smaller than most species of sparrows and more distinctively marked and colored. The male has a black head, pink bill, pinkish sides, white underparts, and white outer tail feathers. The female is similarly marked but the coloration is much lighter.

One other species, the slate-colored junco, regularly visits Oregon in very small numbers each winter. It does not wear the bright colors of the Oregon junco but is entirely gray except for its white underparts and white outer tail feathers.

Grass Nest

In Oregon, juncos nest in timbered and brushy habitat from timberline down to sea level. Usually the nest of grass is built in a slight depression in the ground but occasionally unusual sites are chosen. One pair found a hanging basket of fuchsias on the back porch of an Oswego home an ideal site to raise a brood, while a two-foot cavity in an ash stump on Sauvie Island was selected for a home by another pair. Four bluish eggs, spotted with brown and lavender, comprise the normal clutch.

Farmer's Friend

To the farmer the snowbird is a highly beneficial species, for much of its natural diet consists of weed seeds which it gathers from gardens and brushy areas. When snow covers its feeding ground for extended periods, it becomes quite tame and is easily attracted to feeding stations for bread crumbs, cracked grain, or small seeds placed on or near the ground.

Christmas Decorations Widespread in Valley

Unfortunately no outside pictures of the various decorations could be taken during the Christmas season. Most residents went to great lengths to add a festive touch to the exterior of their homes. Al Baert "planted" his tree on his front lawn and draped it with colored lights so that it could be seen from all sides of the golf course. The Floyd Olanders made a splendid display for the outside of their new building and the Ted Schotts went all-out in their colored light decoration. A huge Christmas star shone over the Mel Browns' trailer and the Bob Byams' unique decoration took the form of bathing in light the distinctive rock that marks their homesite.

Game Enforcement Report Issue

The increased number of hunters and anglers in the field is reflected in enforcement activity of the game division of the Oregon State Police during the 1965-1966 fiscal year.

The recently issued annual report of the State Police shows that officers made 7,472 arrests and issued 3,031 warnings for game law violations. Fines imposed totalled $162,121.60 but the record does not show the percentage suspended.

Most common violations for which arrests were made are:

Angling prohibited areas, hours, or methods	1,921
Angling without license	1,014
Failure to tag properly	898
Hunting prohibited areas, hours, or methods	761
Hunting without license	286
Motor boat violations	262
Exceeding bag limit	256
False application for license	241
Possession of game animals	222
Hunting closed season	202

SOCIAL NOTES:

Mrs. Margaret Emery is in the University of Oregon Medical hospital in Portland, undergoing extensive tests for a heart condition.

Mr. and Mrs. Owen Holmes spent Christmas with his mother in Okanagon, Washington.

Mrs. Delores Williams recently underwent surgery for a leg injury at the Bend Memorial Hospital.

Mrs. Charles Vanderyacht recently was honored at a baby shower given by Mrs. Lilah Worstler. More than twenty women shared in the happy occasion.

The Austin McClisters, including son Jim home from the Navy, enjoyed a trip to Portland over Christmas to visit their oldest daughter Pat, and family, the Larry Halls.

C. M. Atcheson tore himself away from the valley long enough to visit his family at Palo Alto, California.

Lodge Served Christmas Turkey

Giving up some of their own celebration, the cheerful force that makes the Christmas Valley Lodge such an outstanding success worked long enough on Christmas Day to prepare and serve a fine turkey dinner to those winter visitors who chose to be in Christmas Valley for the holidays.

An overnight snowfall of several inches added spice to the Christmas scene and that, with the warmth and good fellowship and food of the Lodge, made Christmas in Christmas Valley something for the winter vacationers to remember.

WANTED! REPORTS ON MARKED DEER

Did you shoot a tagged deer, or see one carrying an ear streamer or a small numbered sheep bell?

If so, the game department wants to hear about it. Winter deer tagging projects continue to trace summer distribution of the various deer herds. Such work has been done particularly from the John Day country south through the desert and Klamath ranges.

HAPPILY PUMPING GAS at his new station, C. M. Atcheson finds himself servicing a lot of out-of-state cars. "Winter visitors, through travelers and outsiders who've heard about Christmas Valley and come to see for themselves. It's a rare day when I hear a complaint," Atch claims.

Game Department Reports On Fall Deer Hunting

If the reports from hunters checked in the field as well as unsolicited reports from hunters returning are any indication, the 1966 general deer season recently completed was one of the best in quite a few years. This is the feeling of game biologists around the state as they summarized their observations and recorded information obtained in the forests and range lands during the hunt.

Of course, the total deer take for the year will not be determined until all hunting seasons are over, with detailed information on the game seasons available in late February or March.

Big Year

Nevertheless, game biologists in almost all parts of Oregon report hunter success above that of last year. The high hunter success was especially apparent on the mule deer ranges of eastern Oregon. West side gunners enjoyed what appears to be a season comparable to last year.

In addition, deer hunters returning from the field said they observed more deer during their stay than they had for several years. Numerous large bucks were taken, with some hunters being quite selective in the buck they chose to shoot.

East Excellent

Information on the general season for west side hunters is still preliminary. The season here extended through October 30, and biologists are just now summarizing information obtained during the final week or ten days of the hunt.

However, for the first part of the season, west side hunters apparently enjoyed about the same success as they did a year ago. In most areas biologists reported hunting pressure down considerably from last year.

Almost without exception the mule deer ranges of eastern Oregon produced excellent numbers of deer. Exceptions, included portions of the Malheur, the Keno unit and west half of the Silver Lake area. In the latter two areas, the reduced deer take was not because of lack of animals, but because of fire closures which barred hunters for much of the season. By mid-season most hunters had filled their tags elsewhere resulting in very light hunting pressure on the areas when fire closures were lifted.

Exceptional

Deer hunting in the dry south-east was considered exceptional. Hunting was slow to start around the Silver Lake area, but improved as weather changed bringing deer out into the more open country. Good hunter success was also reported from the Lakeview district with more hunters than usual in the area. Frank Grogan, biologist at Lakeview, thought the fire closures in the Keno and West Silver Lake areas pushed more hunters into his district than normal. He commented on the poor condition of deer taken from the Interstate unit which contrasted sharply with animals taken elsewhere in Lake county.

The Floyd Olanders popped over to Sparks, Nevada, to enjoy the holidays with their son Garry and his family.

YOUNG STEVE CALCOTE tries to think of what else it was he wanted from Santa Claus. The young son of Navyman Chuck and wife Bobbie Lee Calcote seems very much at home with Santa Claus.

SANTA CLAUS DIGS DEEP for gifts he's brought from the North Pole for Melody Sue Ladbury and her brother Ricky. While other Christmas Valley children await their turn for St. Nick's favors, the Ladbury children beam their pleasure.

WITH LINDA GOERES ASSISTING, Santa Claus (Andy Plano) hunts for just the right present for a tiny blonde celebrant, thus preserving the miracle of Christmas.

JUST BEFORE SANTA CLAUS opened his bag of wonders, the expectant children of Christmas Valley gathered around him in hopeful anticipation. Linda Goeres stands by, just in case Santa can't read name tags without his frosted bifocals.

Christmas Eve In Christmas Valley Brightens Yule Time

Thirty-five children were on hand at the Christmas Valley Lodge when jolly old St. Nick appeared with his bag of presents on Christmas Eve. The cheerful symbol of the Christmas season—who has an amazing ability to look like living persons, in this instance our own Andy Plano—bounded in with his hearty laugh working in fine style.

Even the smallest of the children showed no fear of the jolly red giant and clambored for an opportunity to sit on his lap and peer down into his bag of goodies. Deputizing Linda Goeres as his assistant, Santa made small eyes pop and glisten with his gifts.

Treat for All

While the children awaited St. Nick's arrival in main dining room of the Lodge which was dominated by a huge, decorated white fir tree, they were pacified with plates of ice cream and cookies.

Parents, all on their good behavior, were allowed to watch the proceedings from the sidelines. With these happy preliminaries out of the way, the children went home through the brisk night to dream of the main event, only hours away.

Christmas in Christmas Valley: if you haven't tried it, make arrangements to do so next year!

Lodge Open House Sets Christmas Scene

The handsomely decorated dining room of Christmas Valley Lodge was the cheery scene of the Valley's Christmas Eve Open House. With C. M. "Ask Me And It's As Good As Done" Atcheson presiding at the Wassail Bowl, winter visitors and valley residents alike joined in a 4 to 6 p.m. get-together.

Wassail Wonder

Even those who have in the past enjoyed Atch's buckaroo breakfasts would have been amazed at his dexterity with the cup that cheers. With his left hand not knowing that his right hand was mixing Tom and Jerrys, he southpawed some of the best hot buttered rums that have ever warmed the cockles—and toes—of a yuletide gathering.

Birthdays

Among those celebrating—or commiserating over their fate—were the "birthday" kids: Opal Ladbury who was born on Christmas Eve; Bob Byam, a Christmas Day present to his mother; and Betty Thomas who had the misfortune to be born the day after Christmas when all the presents had been given away. The trio did an excellent job, however, in hiding their misfortunes. Maybe Santa saves a little something special for children like these?

Ft. Rock PTA At Lodge

The Fort Rock PTA organization met recently at the Christmas Valley Lodge. Mrs. Robert Brown was elected vice president to fill a vacancy and projects for the future were discussed. The next meeting will be held at the Fort Rock school.

OPEN HOUSE ON CHRISTMAS EVE at the Lodge was a big success. Winter visitors and residents of Christmas Valley alike joined in celebrating the season. Here Betty Thomas, Opal Ladbury, Dick Morehouse, Mel Brown, Virginia Morehouse, Clark Bomar and Grace Brown salute the Yule Log.

SHARING A CUP OF CHEER at the Lodge Open House are Joe Montana, Ben Wells, Agnes Wells and Maxine Bomar. "Atch's" concept of a hot buttered rum met with high enthusiasm.

CHRISTMAS TIME BIRTHDAYS were popular—Betty Thomas (left) was born on the 26th, Bob Byam, Christmas Day and Opal Ladbury on the 24th. What, no birthday presents?

different styles, and the backyard slope pales to nothing alongside the elaborately arranged ski runs of today.

Leisure

With more time and money, better roads and maintenance, today's skier can find something to fit his skill and pocketbook in almost any section of the country. Certainly the far west has much to offer, for even the warm, sun-drenched valleys are close to snow covered mountains.

Mt. Bachelor

Close to Christmas Valley is Mt. Bachelor, just outside of Bend. The permanent site of the U.S. Ski Association, it is a summer Olympic training camp. With runs and slopes for every class of skier, from beginner to expert, it presents the ultimate in accommodations. Like any other slope worthy of the name, it offers chairs and T bar lifts, with a free rope tow.

Pro Shop

Bachelor has a ski school, of course, with ski shops and snack bar, plus a large parking area and good roads. Nearby Bend offers the winter visitor the choice of one of four hotels, more than 25 motels and a dozen or more first class restaurants.

Local Sites

Nearer at home, and less pretentious, are a number of slopes that provide tows and some accommodations. As some one said, a fall in the snow is a fall in the snow and you can do it as well in Warner Canyon, near Lakeview, as on Mt. Blanc. Maybe not as expensively, but just as awkwardly.

Even if you don't ski, it's fun to watch others who do. And even more fun, sometimes, when they cart the skier off to the First Aid room!

Annual Turkey Shoot Draws Sharpshooters

The third annual Christmas Valley Turkey Shoot was a pronounced success. Held just before Christmas at the local target range, the event was sponsored by the Volunteer Fire Department, with the Ladies' Club doing its customary fine job at supplying paper-work and refreshments.

Hard sunshine breaking through the high cloud cover made the crisp day fine for shooting. In spite of the fact that there were a great many prizes, the Fire Department claimed a nice profit for its working funds.

Among the winners who took home turkeys, hams and packages of bacon were: Dough Houston, Owen Holmes, Doyle Lambert, Jack Warstler, Kenny Morehouse, Wes Ladbury, Carl Warstler and Bob Hamett. Last, and certainly not the least, Kathran McClister won the ladies prize of a turkey for the best shooting — and then in a later round beat all the competing men and women with her trusty .22! Her shoot-out victory earned her a ham to go with the turkey.

The success of local sporting events is always enhanced by the enthusiasm of the participants — and the hard and faithful work of the women of the community who always come through with a tremendous effort, whatever the cause. The turkey shoot was no exception and the valley owes a great debt of gratitude to the cheerful ladies who always turn up, smiling and working.

Looking over the roster of participants makes one wonder who was watching the store. Among those present and burning gunpowder were: Austin, Mike and Johnnie McClister; Jon and Bobbie-Lee Calcote; Bob and Alice Hamett; Gordon and Mark Goeres; Steve and Lee Pritchard; Joe Montano; Andy, Mike and Chris Piazza; Bob Shepherd; Bob Byam; Chuck and Glen Vanderyacht; Clark Bomar; Jim Roper; Ray Houston; Lyla Worstler, Virgie Houston and Agnes Plano.

With a shooting outpost like this, any latter-day James gang would do well to work the west, rather than the east side of the cascades!

OSU Nuclear Reactor Nears Completion

Oregon State University's $900,000 nuclear research reactor facility addition is in the final stages of completion with the pouring of an eight-foot thick concrete shield around the base of the recently installed TRIGA Mark II pulsing nuclear reactor.

$2 Million

Completion of the reactor is scheduled for January, according to Dr. C. H. Wang, director of the Radiation Center. When the reactor is activated in February, the $2 million Center will be the most complete and powerful nuclear science and engineering research facility in the United States, he said.

3 of 7

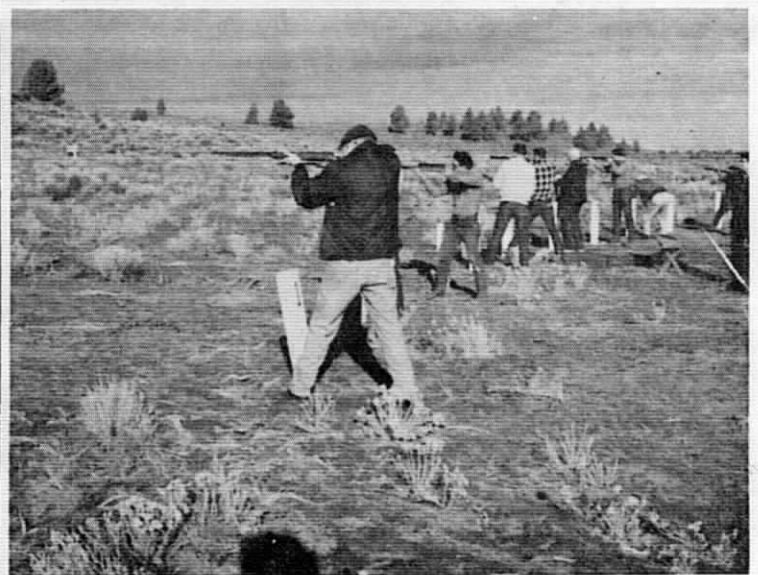

The OSU reactor is the third of seven powerful nuclear research reactors which will be housed at universities throughout the nation. Two now in operation are located at the University of California at Berkeley and at Pennsylvania State University. Others will eventually be completed at the University of Illinois, Texas A & M, Washington State University, and the University of Wisconsin.

DRAWING FOR SHOOTING POSTS, the aspiring turkey shooters gather around to learn their fate. The crisp morning brought out a record crowd, including these early arrivals.

AWAITING THE WORD TO FIRE, these marksmen make last minute checks on ammo and weapons. Men, women and youngsters found the "equalizer" of the old West still a potent force.

FIRE! THE BATTLE of the birds begins. As cordite fumes drifted back, spotters called out the havoc being worked on the targets. A steady hand, a held breath, a gentle squeeze and Bingo! "I could have sworn I was dead on the black!"

AFTER THE BATTLE, mother and sister, aunt and cousin, were there to supply hot beverages and snacks. The Ladies' Club, as usual, was on hand to solace both winners and losers in the third annual Christmas Valley Turkey Shoot.

HOLIDAY ENTERTAINMENT FEATURES CHRISTMAS SEASON

That the Yule season is to be shared with friends was never more evident than this year's round of parties and open houses in Christmas Valley. A community that works together so enthusiastically throughout the year couldn't do less during the festive season.

Among the gatherings was the Open House at the Mel Brown's on the evening of December 23 where the guests found, among the refreshments, boxes of Grace's prized baking exploits.

The Christmas Eve oyster stew buffet at the Byams' on Christmas Eve was thoroughly enjoyed by many. As a treat to themselves, Bob and Helen opened the box from their daughter and son-in-law, now stationed in Czechoslovakia. The guests even helped to install the front porch weather vane and made plans to use their hosts' new fondue chafing dish at the earliest opportunity.

National Survey Reports On 1965 Sportsmen

In 1965 throughout the country 33 million sport fishermen and hunters spent $4 billion to fish and hunt, according to a survey recently issued by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. The survey covers only persons who "substantially" participated in these sports by spending at least three days or $5 just to hunt or fish.

Sport fishermen numbered 23,348,000 and spent $2,925,304,000, using up 522,759,000 recreation days. They travelled 22,719,918,000 passenger miles, mostly by automobile.

Statistics

Hunters numbered 13,583,000 with a total expenditure of $1,121,135,000. They spent 185,819,000 recreation days and travelled 8,659,034,000 passenger miles, again mostly by car.

For the first time information is available on the extent of non-consumptive uses of wildlife. A general recreation survey published by the Bureau of Outdoor Recreation shows there were over 8 million people participating in morning tracks led to the Baerts', where Al and Connie held their customary Christmas morning "Gin Fizz" open house. From there the tracks led in all directions!

Ted and Lucy Schott entertained nine for Christmas dinner. Enjoying the meal were Mrs. Lola Brown, the Baerts, the Byams and the Mel Browns.

Trout Season Set For April 22 Opening

Following a public hearing in Portland today, the Oregon Game Commission adopted final angling regulations for 1967 which were almost identical to the tentative rules as proposed two weeks ago. The only change made was the restoration of the boat fishing deadline on the Williamson River at its original site at Highway 97 Bridge.

General

Season dates for the general trout season will be April 22 through October 31 in all zones except streams in Zone 1, the high lakes, and Zones 3 and 4. Season dates for high lakes in the Cascades and Paulina Mountains and all coast streams in Zone 1 will be May 20 through October 31. Minor date changes were made in the trout season for the bird watching and over 3 million photographing wildlife.

Big Business

Anyone glancing at these figures can see that Recreation is very Big Business. Three billion spent on fishing, more than one billion on hunting and three million people photographing wildlife — with all those wasted shots — means that money spent on game conservation and propagation is money well spent indeed.

Think of it: that shell you fired, that hook you lost, that film you dropped means you did just that much more for the national economy!

"CONGRATULATIONS, DEAR! IT'S A NEW RECORD! IT TOOK YOU JUST 43 SECONDS TO BREAK YOUR FIRST RESOLUTION!"

Rogue and Umpqua watersheds. Steelhead

Of importance to steelhead fishermen was the upstream shifts in the winter deadlines on numerous streams, and removing the deadlines entirely on others. In addition, the winter season was extended through March 31 on streams not already affected. Excellent returns of hatchery steelhead to most north coast streams influenced the commission's decision in allowing anglers a longer season as well as more fishing waters in which to try their skill.

New Areas

Deadline shifts on the Rogue and tributaries will open up about 40 miles of stream for steelhead fishermen, and season dates will allow another month of fishing. Additional upstream tributaries were opened up to early trout fishing under the six-inch regulations. In the Umpqua drainage, the steelhead and salmon deadline was removed from Smith River and the fly-fishing-only deadline moved downstream to its old deadline at Rock Creek.

THOMAS FAMILY NEWCOMERS TO VALLEY AREA

Joining the growing Christmas Valley community is the William L. R. Thomas family, lately of South Carolina. Recently retired from the U.S. Navy, Bill Thomas has established his wife Betty, daughter Patricia 9, and son Billy 7 in a trailer on their property until they can start their home.

At presently employed at the Viewpoint Ranches, Mr. Thomas plans to establish a land clearing, seeding and fencing service in the coming spring season. Betty Thomas is the cheerful manager of the Desert Inn Motel.

While the two children are attending the Ft. Rock school during the day, the only ones holding down the home fort are the Thomas bird dogs — Gladys and Eric. And with upland birds and waterfowl flitting about the premises, these two, also, may find other things to do than stay home.

MYSTIC MYISIS HELPS RAISE OREGON FISH

By Bert Grenfell
State Fish Biologist

Mysis came to Oregon a year ago. They came to help the fish and fishermen. More of their family arrived last month; and, we hope, more will come next year.

You don't know what mysis are? Guess I'd better tell you, then. They are a fresh-water relative of salt-water shrimp, and their full Latin name is mysis relicta. They are about as long as their first name. No, they're not people food, just fish food. Common name for mysis is opossum shrimp, called so for the fact that the female has a brood pouch — opossum style — in which she carries her eggs and developing young.

Imported

Our opossum shrimp came from 150 feet deep in Waterton Lake in Canada's Waterton Park. That's just across the line from Glacier National Park. Last year 320,000 changed residence; this year 640,000 moved. These are well-traveled mysis. We used a boat-pulled trawl net to pick them from the black, cold depths; put them aboard an airplane that flew them home; hauled them by boat out on the lakes; and unceremoniously dumped them out in the strange, new places.

Tough

You bet they are tough; they have to be. And their hardihood is reflected in the choice of living space. These transparent, fragile, and delicate-looking animals live in dark, deep water where it is bitter cold — 39 degrees Fahrenheit — and their sex life takes place in the winter. Each female shrimp produces 40 young. They stay in her pouch till they're about an eighth of an inch long, then depart in the cold and on their own. A life span is two years, with reproduction at one and two years of age.

Night Owls

It's a hard life, but the most intriguing part of mysis' cycle-of-life happens each day, or rather night. Opossums shrimp hate light. During the daylight hours, they are piled up on the dark lake bottom, usually in the first three feet of water. At sunset they head for the surface waters to feed on plankton. Think of it — every night for two years these inchlings go up and then back down to the bottom. That's a round trip of say 300 feet or about 3,600 body lengths. For you, at six feet tall, that's a little over four miles. Quite a swim in anyone's book — and they've been found in 2,000 feet of water!

Rich Food

Remarkable creatures are mysis, and do fish ever enjoy them. In Kootenay Lake, Canada, the average weight of kokanee jumped from one-half pound, before mysis, to three pounds after mysis were introduced. So you see, little mysis will grow bigger fish — and help you, Mr. Angler.
