Inside The Eerie True Stories That Inspired 'The Legend Of Sleepy Hollow'

By Natasha Ishak | Edited By Austin Harvey

Published September 20, 2022

Updated October 28, 2022

Washington Irving's famous tale 'The Legend of Sleepy Hollow' and its iconic headless horseman were inspired by a mix of real history and spooky folklore.

Every year when the green leaves turn bright orange and pumpkins appear on our doorsteps, Washington Irving's classic ghost story, 'The Legend Of Sleepy Hollow,' is retold.

"Gigantic in height, and muffled in a cloak, Ichabod was horror-struck on perceiving that he was headless! But his horror was still more increased on observing that the head, which should have rested on his shoulders, was carried before him on the pommel of his saddle!"

~The Legend of Sleepy Hollow~

The beloved American legend follows the tale of Ichabod Crane, a superstitious schoolteacher who finds himself in the haunted town of Sleepy Hollow, where he suffers an ill-fated encounter with the village's infamous headless horseman before he mysteriously disappears from the community for good.

While the legend is a staple in American folklore, its inspiration is global. Indeed, Washington Irving's haunting work is born out of a mixture of foreign lore, local history, and a bit of the uncanny.

The myth of the headless horseman, like much folklore, is shared across cultures. There are iterations of a decapitated apparition on horseback in both Scandinavia and Northern Europe.

In Celtic tradition, for instance, there's the legend of the dullahan, a headless demon who careens about on a black horse. In the Arthurian tale Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, too, a knight of Camelot beheads a green giant after being challenged, only to witness the creature ride off with its bleeding head in tow.

Most famous perhaps of this folklore are the tales of The Wild Huntsman or Der wilde Jäger by German poet Gottfried August Bürger and the German fairytales of writer Johann Karl Musäus, which depict ghostly riders as bad omens.

Well-read and well-bred Irving certainly would have been exposed to such tales, especially when he went on a European tour and subsequently wrote the collection of short stories 'The Sketch Book of Geoffrey Crayon, Gent,' which included 'The Legend of Sleepy Hollow.'

The American author, however, may have found his inspiration closer to home.

A popular myth following the American Revolution was the story of the headless Hessian soldier. Hessians were German troops called upon to aid in Britain's fight against the American colonists, and one particular Hessian was reportedly decapitated by a cannonball during the Battle of White Plains in 1776.

As the story goes, the corpse of the beheaded Hessian was buried soon after his death at the Old Dutch Church in Sleepy Hollow, near the small village of Tarrytown, New York. It was believed that the Hessian would arise at night in search of his head, and anyone who was ill-fated enough to come across his apparition was condemned to death.

While skeptics of the supernatural could argue against the existence of this headless horseman, historical records show, according to the New-York Historical Society, that there actually was a real decapitated Hessian soldier. In his 1798 memoir, Major General William Heath wrote: "A shot from the American cannon at this place [White Plains] took off the head of a Hessian artilleryman."

Another soldier, Anthony Maxwell, is said to have witnessed the unfortunate death firsthand and talked about it for years after, according to the book Once Upon a Time in the American Revolution.

The haunting tale of the headless Hessian soldier was well-known in the northeast. Coincidentally, about 10 miles from White Plains, New York, where the gruesome death is said to have happened, a teenage boy named Washington Irving was living with a friend in the small village of Tarrytown.

The true story of Sleepy Hollow can be traced to Washington Irving's early years. At age 15, Irving left his native home of New York City and made his way north to Tarrytown, where his friend James Kirke Paulding lived.

But this wasn't a regular house visit. Around that time in 1798, New York City was gripped by yellow fever that had made its way from Philadelphia, where the mosquito-borne disease had killed thousands.

Washington Irving's family was among those wealthy enough to leave the city and find refuge elsewhere. They escaped to the fresh countryside of the Hudson Valley, where it's clear from Irving's writing that he adored the idyllic, pastoral setting and the eerie feelings inspired by its quaint colonial Dutch architecture.

Irving was particularly mesmerized by the Catskill Mountains, which he described as having a "witching effect" on his imagination, according to his biography.

That infatuation greatly influenced Irving's creation of The Legend of Sleepy Hollow in a number of ways. Besides having his fictional Sleepy Hollow village modeled off the real town of North Irving company during his stay in Kinderhook in 1809.

Others claimed, as reported by The New York Times, that the bookish schoolteacher was inspired by Samuel Youngs, a lieutenant from Tarrytown who was friends with the Van Tassel family, who also inspired Irving and appear by name in the folktale. It's likely that Ichabod Crane's character was a composite of both of these men.

Katrina Van Tassel, meanwhile, Ichabod Crane's unrequited love interest, was also presumably based on someone Irving knew personally. Described rather excessively by Irving as "plump as a partridge" and "ripe and melting and rosy-cheeked as one of her father's peaches," Van Tassel is believed to be loosely inspired by Eleanor Van Tassel Brush and perhaps by other women he'd known.

"In Washington Irving's story, the Van Tassels have money, but it's a story, based on several real people and a name taken from a gravestone," Tara Van Tassel, a living descendant of the real-life Tarrytown family, told Westchester magazine.

Washington Irving died on Nov. 28, 1859, of a heart attack in Tarrytown. He's buried in the Sleepy Hollow Cemetery, and his grave is decorated every Halloween.

Tarrytown in which he lived, the writer also enjoyed naming and loosely basing his characters on real people.

The protagonist in Irving's Sleepy Hollow, Ichabod Crane, who "one might have mistaken... for... some scarecrow eloped from a cornfield," is said to have been inspired by Jesse Merwin, a mutual friend the author shared with Martin van Buren, who later became America's eighth president. Merwin was a teacher from upstate New York who had kept

BLM Lakeview Field Office partners with Watershed Council to reduce wildfire risk

Lakeview, Ore. – The Bureau of Land Management (BLM) Lakeview Field Office has partnered with the Lake County Umbrella Watershed Council and private landowners to reduce wildfire risk, increase firefighter safety, and support land health.

The Summer Lake Wildfire Risk Reduction Project is located within the Summer Lake Watershed near Paisley. This area has seen three large wildfires in recent years. Led by the Lake County Umbrella Watershed Council, this collaborative effort includes private landowners, BLM, US Forest Service, Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife, and the Natural Resources Conservation Service. The project encompasses almost 1,000 acres of private lands adjacent to 750 acres of BLM and 7,000 acres of US Forest Service lands.

"The Lakeview Field Office is committed to working in partnership with private landowners in Lake County to make their communities more fire safe," said Jami Ludwig, Lakeview Field Manager. "We appreciate the strong participation from the watershed council to reduce fuels on private property."

Thinning treatments conducted along most of the private/public land boundary are now complete. There is still a section of private land that will be treated soon. This area supports upland game birds, mule deer, bighorn sheep, and livestock grazing. It is also a key area for defensible space for nearby homes.

With the support of a grant through the BLM's Community Assistance Program, planned thinning and prescribed burning will take place on this remaining 470-acre section of densely forested vegetation. Proactively addressing dense fuel stands will decrease wildfire threat to nearby homes. Planned fuels reduction treatments will also reduce the chances of a severe wildfire that can impact fish and wildlife habitat and cause soil erosion and sedimentation into nearby streams.

"Wildfire knows no boundaries, and neither should we," said Autumn Muir, Lake County Umbrella Watershed Council. "By working together across jurisdictional fence lines, we can better treat the landscape with a ridge top to ridge top restoration mindset."

Collaboration through a checkerboarded landscape of ownership greatly improves the effectiveness of these fuels reduction treatments. These treatments will be critical to wildfire response and increasing firefighter safety.

Learn more about defensible space here: <https://www.oregon.gov/osfm/wildfire/pages/oregon-defensible-space.aspx>. Read about the BLM's Community Assistance program here: <https://www.nifc.gov/about-us/our-partners/blm/fuels/community-assistance>.

Grants issued in September to KCC support students & building construction

KLAMATH FALLS — Four significant grants awarded to Klamath Community College (KCC) during the month of September – totaling nearly $2.4 million – will support students, develop new programming, and complete fundraising for the campus's newly constructed Apprenticeship Center. Established in 1996, KCC has been consistently growing in recent years through expanding programs and facilities, most recently with completion of the KCC Apprenticeship Center and addition of a cosmetology program. The four grants, some covering multiple years of program operations, reflect KCC's focused efforts on providing the best programming, direct student supports, modern facilities, and collaborative community work.

"It is important that we not only provide the best possible education and training for career opportunities, but that we make it affordable for those who desire to pursue these programs, and this funding accomplishes that," said Dr. Roberto Gutierrez, KCC president. "Our ongoing pursuit of grant dollars directly contributes to providing the best facilities, instruction, and support possible to aid students seeking new, sustainable, quality career paths."

Grants received by KCC include $900,000 from the U.S. Economic Development Administration, supplementing its initial $3 million grant applied to Apprenticeship Center construction; with this award mitigating construction cost increases.

A third cycle of U.S. Department of Transportation funding, for $199,988, through the Commercial Motor Vehicle Operator Safety Training (CMVOST) program was announced by the offices of Senators Ron Wyden and Jeff Merkley. CMVOST grant funds will cover tuition and fees of up to 34 students through 2025 for commercial driver's license and hazardous materials certification training, with a priority toward current and former members of the U.S. Armed Forces.

The Oregon Health Authority has also notified KCC of its intent to award a Healthy Oregon Workforce Training Opportunity (HOWTO) grant of potentially $270,000 across three years for creation of a non-credit community health worker training and certification program to serve both Klamath and Lake counties. The grant will also provide supports for more than 80 students through an "earn to learn" structure. KCC is partnered with Cascade Health Alliance for development of this program.

KCC was also awarded $998,817 through the Oregon Higher Education Coordinating Commission's Future Ready Oregon Workforce Ready program. This three-year project – done in partnership with local industry and employers – will provide workforce training and certification in welding and millwright manufacturing for up to 90 students. Grant funds will provide for hiring of additional instructors, student tuition, fees and supports, as well as workforce placement assistance.

For more information about programs available at KCC visit www.klamathcc.edu.

invites everyone to enjoy the Park and Rec properties.

We ask that while enjoying the properties; specifically,
the Golf Course, the Rodeo Grounds, the playground, the multi-use field and Baert Lake, that you be a good steward
and please do not litter, please maintain control of your pets
