

BUSINESS OF THE MONTH

Gene and Hazel Hill moved from Portland to Christmas Valley in 1976. They settled on Millican Road. At the time Gene was a foreman for a construction company so he traveled a great deal. About a year and a half ago, they moved to their present location, one and one-half miles north of the Lodge, and started Gene's Welding and Repair.

Gene does welding, machine work, metal fabrication and farm equipment repair. Among his pieces of equipment are a lathe, drill press and hydraulic press.

Hazel originally from California and studied to be a computer programmer. Gene grew up in Montana. Both eventually moved to Portland and met while they were working for the J. A. Freeman Company.

Hazel raised boxer dogs in Portland but she discovered that the Christmas Valley weather was too cold for them. She loves horses, too.

Hazel does the bookkeeping for the business. The Hills enjoy their large greenhouse in which they raise berries, fruit trees, vegetables and flowers. Her first rose bloomed on Mother's Day this year. Gene also enjoys motorcycles.

The Hills have two children. Gene is almost six and Casey will soon be two.

FARM CO-OP MEETING

A Farm Co-op meeting was held April 29, 1981 at the Christmas Valley Community Hall. Few persons showed up for this organizational and board election meeting.

The five member committee consisting of George Brown, Chuck Nofziger, Terry Nofziger, Bob Nordyke and Art Stewart reported there was much interest in the community in forming a co-op but most farmers could not see their way clear to financially support their share at this time.

Those present urged that organizational work for the co-op not be dropped completely. A local scales, grain storage and competitive prices to supply their farm needs were co-op services definitely needed by the community, they said.

The committee agreed to pursue it further at a later date if interest continued and definite financial support could be enlisted.
