MARCH IS WOMEN'S HISTORY MONTH

The Woman Who Became Governor 11 Years Before Women's Suffrage

By MICHELLE T. HARRIS

Carrie B. Shelton had the power to veto bills as Oregon governor—but she couldn't vote.

More than a decade before American women gained the right to vote, a 32-year-old woman stepped into the role of governor of Oregon, becoming the first woman to assume a state's top office. While she was only governor over a weekend and her impact on the state was minimal, the fact that Carrie B. Shelton served as the state's chief executive helped garner respect for women's participation in politics and added to the call for women's suffrage.

Shelton never actively sought the governorship, but rather was well-placed when circumstances left the position open. On Saturday, February 27, 1909, Governor George Chamberlain of Oregon resigned from office before boarding a train cross-country. He was headed to Washington, D.C. to be sworn in as a U.S. Senator. Though Chamberlain hadn't yet finished his second term as governor, he needed to be in the capital by March 4 to be sworn in along with the rest of the freshman senate class. If he arrived late, every member would have seniority over him.

By Oregon law, Secretary of State

Frank W. Benson would normally have assumed the role as acting governor over the weekend. However, Benson was too ill to immediately step in. This left Chamberlain's private secretary, Shelton, the next natural successor to take the governor's office over the next 48 hours. Meanwhile, Benson would have time to recover before being sworn in on Monday morning.

This is how Shelton became America's first female governor—11 years before the August 18, 1920 ratification of the 19th Amendment granted women the right to vote. In her brief role as governor, Shelton had the power to veto bills and sign executive orders—all before she could legally cast a ballot.

Genealogist Anne Mitchell, a great-great-niece of Shelton, spent years collecting documents on her family history as well as many of Shelton's surviving possessions, which she donated to the Willamette Heritage Center.

"She could run things on her own and was extremely knowledgeable," says Mitchell about Shelton. She says unfortunately, little documentation remains about Shelton's time in office.

Born Carrie Bertha Skiff in 1876 to Willis and Mary Skiff, Shelton spent her early years in Union County, Oregon. On the night of July 24, 1886, her father mysteriously disappeared while waiting to board a train home. Two years later, her mother died, leaving Carrie along with siblings Nolan and Mabel, orphans. The trio were briefly left in care of their older brother Orrin and his wife Elizabeth. This arrangement didn't work out and they were then left in the custody of a local attorney, John W. Shelton.

Carrie's relationship with her guardian became the center of controversy when Mr. Shelton filed for divorce with his wife, who was away visiting family in California at the time. After crossing the border into Weiser, Idaho, 16-year-old Carrie married Shelton on October 27, 1892.

The marriage didn't last long as her husband passed away just a month before her 18th birthday.

In 1895, Shelton took a job as a stenographer at a Portland law firm. A diligent worker and quick learner, her talents caught the attention of Chamberlain, an attorney and politician who entrusted her with responsibilities usually reserved for young lawyers, such as preparing legal papers.

Shelton continued working as Chamberlain's stenographer after he was elected to the Multnomah County district attorney's office in 1900, and then joined him in Salem after he was elected Governor of Oregon in 1902.

During his tenure as governor, Chamberlain promoted her as his private secretary, a title that up until that point, had been held by men. Shelton later discussed her experience with The Sunday Oregonian in 1914:

"It was not the office that had broadened so much—it was its legal significance. So, when the Senator went away for the first time after he had taken his oath of office as Governor of Oregon, I suddenly found that I was, so to speak, in his shoes, and was really 'Madam Governor.'"

On March 1, 1909, Benson was sworn in as governor. Shelton then moved to Washington, D.C. to work as Chamberlain's private secretary and overseeing a staff of at least three clerks, according to official registers from the time.

In 1913, Shelton marched in Washington, D.C. alongside fellow suffragists. After women in Oregon were granted the right to vote in 1912, The National Magazine referenced her run as governor in a May 1913 issue:

"When the suffragettes marched to the Capitol on April 7th to present their petition in the Senate Building, there was one among them who enjoyed the unique distinction of having been the governor of a state and commonwealth. Although the state of Oregon but recently adopted 'votes for women,' yet one of the gentler sex has already acted as its chief executive."

Shelton continued working as Chamberlain's right-hand person and stayed by his side after he suffered a paralytic stroke. They married on July 12, 1926, however she found herself a widow once again when he died two years later. After returning home to Oregon to live with family, Carrie Bertha Chamberlain died on February 3, 1936.

"Shelton's role in the suffrage movement garnered more attention after she arrived in Washington D.C. resuming her position as Chamberlain's private secretary and later appointment to clerk of the Committee for Public Lands," says Kaylyn F. Mabey, a research assistant at the Willamette Heritage Center.

"We glean from newspaper accounts stories of the large number of women visitors she received and their insistence on referring to her as 'Governor' out of respect for the office she'd held, even if briefly."

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Hi I am not yet a subscription holder of your magazine newspaper but I seen the December 1, 2020 issue and liked what I've seen so after I get paid I'm going to order from you.

But I did want to point out on Page 15 you have a recipe for Cholate Peppermint Whoopie Pies in the ingredients you do not list baking powder. But in the instructions line (2) it calls for it. Just wanted to let you know if no one else has.

Keep up the good job with your paper.

CHIROPRACTIC
PHYSICIAN

I have been a chiropractor for 15 years and I absolutely love what I do helping patients improve and restore their health and lead a life of wellness. Chiropractic is based on the principal that health and wellness comes from within and spinal problems interfere with this balance.

I was born in Caracas, Venezuela. I received a Bachelor degree in Applied Sciences in Aviation at the University of Louisiana at Monroe. I also graduated from Parker College of Chiropractic, Dallas, Texas, in 2001. I practiced in Australia for 11 years before moving back to the United States and settling in Oregon.

I have a practice in Bend, Oregon and practice on Thursdays at the North Lake Health District.

I like to play soccer and other sports, but since moving to this area, hiking and skiing have become a new interest of mine. I am also very interested in yoga and I enjoy spending time with my three children.

LAKE COUNTY RURAL VOICES ON A CHANGING LAND PROJECT 2021

By Carolyn Law

Do Lake County folks have a deep understanding and appreciation of their land – it's diverse landscapes and nature? YES! is the resounding answer.

There is so much to appreciate – the dynamic vastness of the ever-changing sky and clouds, weather changes sweeping in; the incredible vistas with dramatic changes of shifting light and season; the soil, grasses, forests, rivers, and the most delicate of wildflowers; animals and birds; recreation in many special places; the drama of impacts to the land from fire, juniper encroachment, watershed restoration, and more.

The ever-changing weather has made the most change on our lake County landscape. Some years are dry and hot, others are cooler and wetter.
~ Lissa Webbon Fall 2016

"RURAL VOICES ON A CHANGING LAND" invites the Lake County community to join together to capture and share the depth of appreciation and understanding each of you have for the land you live on and in. Your deep connection to the landscape and environment will be expressed in your distinctive words and photographs emphasizing their importance of taking good care of the land looking ahead to future generations.

The project grew from my 2014 residency at PLAYA Arts & Science Residency in Summer Lake. I fell in love with the land, and the community. Lake County's landscape amazed me with all its diverse landforms, huge vistas, and types of environments. I formed a partnership with Lake County Resource Initiative and the Lake County Libraries as I realized your rural community has wonderful long, deep experiences with the land and environment.

COMMUNITY PHOTOGRAPHY SHOW

The 2nd Community Landscape Photography Show will showcase the diverse beauty and changes in our landscape

When I went to Hart Mountain in August 2006 for the first time, the lakes viewed from the lookout were all full. For the next 10 years, the valley was dry, all white dust in vaguely circular patterns, like placid lakes for ghost water, even in spring. Now, at long last, Lake County lives up to its name again.

If I were chosen to leave Lake County for good, I would miss the abundance of agriculture, wildlife, and wide open spaces. There truly is no place quite like this one.

On a Changing Land

This is the conclusion of the six-year "Rural Voices" project, a community effort to describe the importance of the land of Lake County for the people who live and work here.

So different from city dwellers. Sharing your insights will be so helpful as people everywhere are working to steward and care for all of our lands and the diverse ecologies we are so inter connected with.

In 2018 Phase 1 of the project took place through a grant from the Oregon Cultural Trust. This phase included digital photography workshops; a Community Landscape Photography Show exhibited in Lakeview, Paisley and Christmas Valley; an interactive website for people to place markers at specific location linked to each person's words and/or photo onto a Goggle earth map to "Re-Map" the county; in-depth interviews with 18 people all over the county; and three community conversations in three locations to share words and thoughts about the land.

NOW -- Phase 2 of this exciting, interactive project is launching with a grant from Oregon Humanities. Lake County Resource Initiative is partnering with me again, with continued assistance from Lake County Libraries. We've had to replan activities as distanced and virtual because of Covid restrictions, but they'll still be effective!

You can already participate by looking at an on-going collection of beautiful landscape photographs on the Facebook Group page, "My Lake County", and by posting on the www.ourlake-county.org interactive mapping website.

We will also be sending a direct mailing to half the county in early April. This will include a keepsake photograph postcard along with a stamped return postcard to send back to the Lakeview Library with your written thoughts on the land (extra postcards will be available at each library branch), and a 2nd Community Landscape Photography Show later in the spring.

OBITUARY

Claude Blackman
January 28, 1948 - January 16, 2021

Claude Blackman was a true Oregonian, born and raised. He passed away January 16, 2021 of multiple medical conditions.

He is survived by his wife, Shari Blackman; son, Brian Blackman (wife Renee); son, Claude Blackman, Jr. (wife Leonor); daughter, Annette Blackman; two step-children, Tom and Jeff Weinman; brother, Jerry Blackman (wife Carolyn); five grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Work, work, work, was his mantra. Claude lived and worked in the Christmas Valley area since the seventies. He was a well driller, a realtor, twice a restaurant and bar owner, and a farmer. He like to hunt and fish. He was an Air Force Veteran.

He was preceded in death by his brother, Lester, and his parents Paul and Elsie Blackman.

Family and friends are invited to attend a celebration of life for Claude
Saturday, March 6, 2021 from 1 pm to 4 pm at the

Exotic Plants

Kava piper methysticum G. Forst.
Pepper Family : Piperaceae

As though giving a clue to one of its dangerous effects on the human body, the kava shrub grows wild on many south Pacific islands sports broad, heart shaped leaves webbed with a network of prominent veins. In large enough doses, the narcotic drugs that the plant contains can increase the force of heart action while decreasing the pulse rate, induce a hypnotic state, and paralyze large skeletal muscles such as those of the legs.

The storehouse of drugs lies in the erect, 8 to 20-foot-tall shrubs roots and large woody rhizomes (underground) stems. Islanders have long used these root stocks to make a potent beverage call Kava-Kava, which has played a role in virtually all their ceremonies of life: it has been drunk to celebrate marriages, births, and other rites of passage, to mourn deaths, to placate the gods, to cure illnesses, to remove curses, to herald the beginnings of work projects, and to bid such projects farewell. Its effect is not intoxicating in that it does not dull mental processes, but narcotic. It induces a euphoric state of tranquil well-being that eventually leads to a deep dreamless sleep.

The time-honored method of activating the drugs is still the most effective, although outsiders may find it repellant. To the accompaniment of song and ceremony, pieces of the dried root stock are chewed- generally by young girls with strong teeth- until the are reduced to a soft, pulpy mass. This is spit into a wooden bowl, mixed with water or coconut milk, and kneaded by hand. After a few hours of fermentation, the solids are strained out and the liquid is drunk-in the old days, only by men.

The root stocks are seldom chewed nowadays. They are simply pulverized, mixed with water or coconut mild, and filtered out. The result is a popular beverage, drunk by men and women alike, that has a stimulating, tonic effect but lacks the narcotic power of the chewed product. Research has shown that it is not the chewers saliva that sets the drugs narcotic constituents free, as had been speculated, but the vigorous emulsification caused by the chewing process, modern pharmacy can emulsify the crude drug in a suitable oil.

Several constituents of the root-stock, including methysticin, yangonin, and kawain, have been isolated and harvested for use in sedative, tranquilizers, and appetite stimulants. In the 20th century, some extracts of the rootstocks were found to have antiseptic properties, which led to their use in treating various infections, especially those of the genitourinary tract: but these have been superseded by more effective drugs.
