It Was A Great Finale For the Christmas Valley Park and Recreation District 2021 Gymkhana/Play Day Season!!!

The new Christmas Valley Park and Recreation District's Rodeo Grounds Committee (Kenny Winebrenner, Jim Strong, Becky Womack, and volunteer, Terry Terrill) had a very successful first year of Rodeo Grounds events.

All the participants agree that they had a lot of fun, and no one seemed to want the season to end.

A lot of work went in to preparing the Rodeo Grounds and the arena for the events. The Rodeo Grounds were built in the early 1960's and over the years have fallen into disrepair. The committee members and other volunteers worked hard to tear out the old non-functional pens and repurposed the old lumber to repair the arena and build new pens. There were issues with old water lines, as well. Their hard work patched things up enough to allow CVPR to host this season of Play Days.

To make the season more memorable the committee decided to have a buckle series. Participants of the various age groups accumulated points throughout the season and the participants with the highest scores earned a buckle in their age group. Jim Strong did a great job finding just the right buckles for the 2021 Buckle Series.

Jim was the MC for all the events; volunteers, Peggy McElroy and Commissioner, James Williams, kept the stats, and throughout the season. The volunteers on the ground helping to set up the events were, Garrett Winebrenner, Steve Hilger and daughter, Isabel. Our gate keeper for the season was Loren Couysens who did a fantastic job! Every one of them were invaluable to the success of the season!

Always behind the scenes and our BBQ chef for the finale was our CVPR Board chair, Shara Shumway. She fixed the sinks and toilets in the bathrooms at the Rodeo Grounds, she fixed water spigots, she shopped for and picked up the necessary items to fix the arena and to prepare the BBQ (and way too much more to list here). She is phenomenal!

The committee is already making plans for another Play Day Season next year, and to have other types of events in addition to the Play Days.

There is talk of doing a few more Play Days this Fall by special request of several participants that did not want to see the season end. Stay tuned!

Buckle Sponsors!!!

RAW SEWAGE: MORE THAN A STINKY TOPIC

If you lived in a fast-growing, 16th-century European metropolis, several juxtaposing sights and smells greeted you every day. There were the open-air markets filled with the aromas of freshly baked bread and hand-picked vegetables. But at your feet were the shallow roadside trenches of human excrement flowing toward the nearby cesspool. Along with watching your step, you needed to dodge human waste that occasionally flew out of second-story windows onto the street below.

Historic sewer systems were much more noticeable back then, and the public suffered for it. In medieval Europe, huge numbers of people died from cholera, typhoid fever, and dysentery, which spread from drinking sewage-contaminated water. Plague transmitted by fleas from the rodent infestation of the time was also a common problem.

How You Can be Exposed to Raw Sewage Today:

Properly installed septic systems, modern centralized sewer systems and water treatment plants help to ensure clean drinking water for all. But that doesn't mean raw sewage exposure is extinct.

The most common ways you can be exposed to raw sewage today include:

- Not having a proper septic system: Allowing raw sewage to contaminate the soil and drinking water system can cause health risks.

- Overflowing toilets: A clogged toilet can easily overflow if you don't remove the clog quickly and effectively.
- Overflowing septic tanks: Septic tank waste is a mixture of wastewater, organic waste, solid waste, and human excrement. Exposure to any of these things can cause health risks.
- Backed-up sinks and tubs: When a clogged sink or bathtub overflows, the sewer water it brings with it can be harmful to your health.
- Raw human feces used in water or untreated fertilizer to grow vegetables for human consumption.

Diseases Caused by Raw Sewage Exposure:

- Campylobacteriosis: Campylobacter causes an estimated 1.5 million illnesses each year in the United States. Symptoms of this disease include fever, bloody diarrhea, abdominal pain, cramping, nausea, and vomiting.
- Cryptosporidiosis: Cryptosporidium infection (cryptosporidiosis) is an illness caused by tiny, one-celled cryptosporidium parasites. When cryptosporidia (krip-toe-spo-e-RID-e-uh) enter your body, they travel to your small intestine and then burrow into the walls. Later,

- they're shed in your feces. In most healthy people, a cryptosporidium infection produces a bout of watery diarrhea. The infection usually goes away within a week or two. This waterborne disease causes a slight fever, diarrhea, loose or watery stools, upset stomach, and stomach cramps.

- Diarrheagenic E. Coli: Drinking fecal-contaminated water or irrigating crops with fecal-contaminated water can expose you to E. coli, resulting in fever, watery or bloody diarrhea, abdominal cramps, nausea, and vomiting.

- Gastroenteritis: Also known as the stomach flu, this infection causes fever, watery diarrhea, headaches, abdominal cramps, and vomiting.

- Giardiasis: Giardia infection is caused by a microscopic parasite that is found worldwide, especially in areas with poor sanitation and unsafe water. Giardia infection (giardiasis) is one of the most common causes of waterborne disease in the United States. Some people with giardia infection never develop signs or symptoms, but they still carry the parasite and can spread it to others through their stool. Symptoms include diarrhea, loose or watery stools, upset stomach, and stomach cramps.

- Hepatitis A: This viral liver disease is contracted from ingesting infected fecal matter. Symptoms include fever, fatigue, jaundice, abdominal pain, loss of appetite, nausea, and diarrhea.
- Salmonellosis: Caused by exposure to Salmonella, this disease can cause fever, diarrhea, and abdominal cramps.
- Dysentery: Ingesting contaminated fecal drinking water or consuming vegetables grown using contaminated fecal water can cause this disease, symptoms of which include fever, bloody diarrhea, and stomach cramps.
- Typhoid fever: According to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), about 400 Americans each year acquire typhoid, most of them while traveling in developing countries. Untreated, the illness may last for 3 to 4 weeks. Roughly 5 percent of those who contract the illness become chronic carriers-excreting the typhoid bacteria in their stools for more than a year. A bacterial disease spread through contaminated food and water, this disease causes high fever, weakness, cough, headaches, stomach pains, and loss of appetite. Some people also experience a rash.

With knowledge of these raw sewage exposure diseases and their symptoms, it's clear how effective modern plumbing is at saving lives and keeping us healthy every day.

Cumin (cuminum Cyminum)

A familiar scent in curries, mole, and more is an essential to Indian, Mexican, Middle Eastern, African, and Asian cuisine as well as being a staple medicinal herb since before written history.

Cumin was discovered while excavating the ancient city of Tel ed-Der (near present day Iraq), which dates to second millennium BCE and early Mesopotamia. The Egyptians used cumin in cooking and in the embalming process, while Greeks and Romans peppered it in meals and steeped it in wine to dispel "dyspeptic headache". The Hippocratic Corpus, a collection of 5th millennium medical texts, mentions cumin as a remedy to cure women's "hysteria" by keeping the uterus from traveling about the pelvic cavity.

It became a popular spice during the Middle Ages where it was grown in monasteries, used as 13th century currency, and featured as a seasoning in the court of King Henry III. Brought to the Americas, Cuba, the Caribbean, Africa, and Southeast Asia by Spanish colonists where it became a valued spice and medicinal remedy; sometimes used to settle digestion and as a poultice or liniment for cramps due to "sluggish congestion".

Cumin has a history of curious folklore. First considered an herb that "conferred the gift of retention," over the years it transitioned to a symbol of love, while still maintaining the theme of retaining something of value. In medieval wedding ceremonies, both bride and groom carried cumin on their big day as a sign of commitment, faithfulness, and happiness. Young wives baked cumin bread and steeped it in wine for their men to ensure they never strayed; likewise, it was fed to household chickens to prevent wandering as well!

In Arabic traditions, cumin mixed with black pepper and honey served as an aphrodisiac. Soldiers routinely kept cumin in their pockets to remember loved ones and to safeguard their return home. This gift of "retention" also applied to objects - thieves who burgled a home protected by cumin would be "retained" until caught.
