MARCH IS WOMEN'S HISTORY MONTH

The 19th Amendment Did Not Guarantee All Women the Right to Vote

By LESLEY KENNEDY

With the certification of the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution on August 26, 1920, women secured the right to vote after a decades-long fight. "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex," it reads.

But while the passage of the 19th Amendment enabled most white women to vote, that wasn't the case for many women of color.

"For Black women, their votes weren't lifted by that tide in the South," Christina Rivers, associate professor of political science at DePaul University, says. "Their votes were suppressed solely on the basis of race."

Also prevented from voting: Native Americans—both men and women—did not gain the right to vote until the Snyder Act of 1924, four years after the ratification of the 19th Amendment and more than 50 years after the passage of the 15th Amendment. Even then, some Western states, including Arizona, New Mexico and Utah, didn't grant Native Americans the right to vote until the 1940s and '50s. It wasn't until the Cable Act of 1922 that women were allowed to keep their citizenship—and gain the right to vote—if they were married to an immigrant (who had to be eligible to become a U.S. citizen).

In Puerto Rico, literate women won the right to vote in 1929, but it wasn't until 1935 that all women were given that right. And Asian American immigrant women were denied the right to vote until 1952 when the Immigration and Nationality Act allowed them to become citizens.

But even with the passage of these amendments and acts, a number of nefarious methods were used to keep segments of the population from voting. Most of these measures targeted Black Americans in the Jim Crow South, but Latinx, Native American and Asian Americans also faced obstacles to voting in the Southwest and West.

"When you combine literacy tests, invasive registration forms, interpretation tests, poll taxes and outright violence, this kept Black voting registration percentages down to the single digits in most of the Confederate South," Rivers says.

In fact, according to Pearl Dowe, professor of political science and African American studies at Emory University, efforts to legalize the right to vote were fraught with racism and division stemming back to the abolitionist movement.

"The biracial coalition that formed during abolition was very tenuous and eventually fractured due to conflicts about what should the status of freed Blacks be," she says. "This was often based on whites having conflicting attitudes about the humanity of Blacks and if they were equal to whites. These issues and divides continued into the suffrage movement."

And those divides didn't stop with the 19th Amendment's passage. In addition to threats, intimidation, harassment, beatings and murders, other devices, such as literacy tests, were implemented not only in the Jim Crow South, but also in some other states including Connecticut, and designed specifically to deny Black people and immigrants from voting.

Administered and interpreted arbitrarily, registrars could ask citizens test questions at their discretion and also had the authority to pass or fail applicants with no explanation. The practice didn't end in some states until the passage of the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

Related to literacy tests were interpretation tests, which weren't struck down by the courts until the late 1950s on the grounds they were too arbitrary. According to Rivers, an interpretation test would involve transcribing or translating a passage of a complicated piece of writing—usually legalese from a state constitution. "They were designed to be very difficult to pass," Rivers says.

It wasn't until 45 years after the 19th Amendment became law, with the passage of the Voting Rights Act, that all women were free to vote.

Harriet Tubman Day March 10th

She was born Araminta "Minty" Ross into slavery in Dorchester County, Maryland, probably around 1822. Her parents, Harriet ("Rit") Green and Ben Ross, were both enslaved.

The Brodess family who "owned" her mother hired Harriet out and assigned her to do work including caring for children, checking muskrat traps, field and forest work, driving oxen, plowing, and hauling logs.

She suffered a traumatic head injury as a young girl, probably in the 1830s. The injury caused a lifetime of seizures, headaches, and visions.

After she married John Tubman, a free Black man, around 1844, she changed her name from Araminta to Harriet, and thus became Harriet Tubman.

She escaped slavery and made it to Philadelphia, traveling alone mostly under the cover of night, in 1849.

After she escaped, she spent more than 10 years making secret return trips to Maryland to help her friends and family escape slavery. With each trip she risked her life. Her last rescue mission was in 1860.

When the Civil War began, Tubman worked for the Union Army, first as a cook and nurse, and then as an armed scout and spy. In 1863, she became the first woman to lead an armed expedition in the war, liberating more than 700 slaves.

After the Civil War, she moved to property she had purchased in 1859 in Auburn, New York, where she cared for her aging parents.

She was involved in the suffrage movement, fighting not only for the rights of women, but also for minorities, the disabled, and the aged.

She died on March 10, 1913. She is buried in Auburn, New York.

Christmas Valley Park and Recreation District

invites everyone to enjoy the Park and Rec properties.

We ask that while enjoying the properties; specifically,
the Golf Course, the Rodeo Grounds, the playground, the multi-use field and Baert Lake, that you be a good steward and please do not litter, please maintain control of your pets
by keeping dogs on a leash and/or maintaining constant supervision. If your dog should defecate on the premises, please be sure to pick up after it.

Horses and camping are only permitted at the Rodeo Grounds.

Being good stewards and taking pride in these properties reflects on our community as a whole.

Thank you for your continued support of Christmas Valley Park and Recreation District.
